

IADC drilling rig contract

What is a drilling contract?

The drilling contract is one of the most important contracts for an operator. A drilling contract will allocate certain risks on a reciprocal basis (including personal injury, damage to property, certain pollution risks and consequential damages), regardless of fault.

What is integrated rig drilling and completion (IRDC) contracting?

The Integrated Rig Drilling and Completion (IRDC) contracting model represents a paradigm shift in the oil and gas industry, aiming to streamline operations, reduce costs, and enhance collaboration among stakeholders. Traditionally, operators engaged with multiple service providers, leading to complex contract management and integration challenges.

What is the International Association of drilling contractors' liability?

The International Association of Drilling Contractors disclaims any liability whatsoever for loss or damages which may result from use of the form contract or portions or variations thereof. Computer generated form, reproduced under license from IADC. TO: Windsor Energy Group, LLC

What is an IADC footage contract?

The IADC footage contract specifies that the operator is an independent contractor. The contractor more clearly assumes the risk associated with drilling under a footage contract rather than under a daywork contract. A footage contract may call for daywork compensation.

What are the different types of drilling contracts?

The Independent Association of Drilling Contractors (IADC) has its own set of drilling contracts, and they are commonly used. Most of the wells in the United States are drilled under one of the three major types of drilling contracts: the Turnkey, the Daywork, or the Footage contracts. Examples of all three of these contracts are in the workbook.

Can a drilling contractor disclose drilling information to third parties?

Most drilling contracts contain a provision that upon the written request of the operator, the drilling contractor may not divulge drilling information to third parties. The contractor also promises that its employees will not divulge any drilling information to third parties.
