Why should you hire an oil rig accident lawyer?

Our Undefeated Oil Rig Accident Lawyers have a proven track record of winning significant compensation for oil and gas workers who have been catastrophically injured, severely burned, and tragically killed in connection with oilfield explosions, blowouts, and accidents.

What should I do if my oil rig accident is fatal?

If an oil rig accident results in a fatal injury, it's crucial to report the accident and the fatality immediately. With the drilling company and its insurer likely to minimize compensation, it's up to you to protect your family's future.

How dangerous are oil rig workers?

The combination of flammable materials, high temperatures, and the potential for explosions can create extremely hazardous conditions for workers. In addition to burn injuries caused by explosions and fires, oil rig workers also face risks from hot surfaces or equipment that may come into contact with their skin.

What causes oil rig accidents?

One factor contributing to oil rig accidents is the hazardous nature of the work environment itself. The oil field industry involves heavy machinery, flammable gasses, and exposure to toxic chemicals. Working long hours in a small area under high-pressure situations can also lead to fatigue and decreased alertness, increasing the risk of accidents.

What are the different types of oil rig injuries?

On the other hand, severe oil rig injuries may involve catastrophic burns, head trauma, spinal cord injuries, broken bones, or fractures-- just to name a few. These types of personal injuries require immediate medical attention and may result in permanent disability or disfigurement.

What happens if an oil rig explodes?

When an explosion occurs on an oil rig, the resulting fire can quickly engulf the surrounding area. The intense heat from these fires can cause first-degree burns, also called superficial burns, or worse to anyone caught in its path. Second-degree burns involve blistering of the skin and are even more painful.
